EMPLOYMENT HISTORY

Year Of Exprience	10

Background	What I am good at doing: Through my veterinary career, I have developed several skills that make me an excellent candidate for factory work: · Strict Adherence to Hygiene: I am trained in sterilization and preventing contamination. I understand the critical importance of maintaining clean environments, which is vital in food processing or manufacturing plants. · Attention to Detail: Misdiagnosing an animal has serious consequences. This has trained me to be incredibly observant and meticulous—skills that translate perfectly to quality control on a production line. · Handling Tools & Equipment: I am proficient in using technical instruments, performing maintenance on equipment, and following safety protocols. · Physical Stamina & Reliability: Veterinary work is physically demanding. I am used to working long shifts, lifting heavy loads, and standing for extended periods. I am reliable and punctual. Why I want to move to factory work: I am looking for a new challenge and a stable environment where I can apply my discipline and technical skills to a different industry. I am a fast learner and ready to be trained in new machinery and production processes
